rived with a note from Katle to Schultz. In it she said:

"If you don't come in an hour I shall speak to my mother. You have betrayed me, and I will not permit you to break any other girl's heart or marry her."

Louis had a pressing engagement and left Miss Wolters in a fresh burst of tears. Next day he said the marriage could not be, and Miss Wolters's wedding-gown of white slik has not been used yet, though, according to her amdavits, she has been ready and willing all these weeks to accompany Mr. Schultz to the altar at the Fifteenth Street Lutheran Church, of which she is a devoit member.

Mr. Schultz is in Saratoga just now, and heartbroken decryine is in seclusion. Chast. T. Wagner, a brother-in-law of Schultz and his former business partner, was introduced by Schultz to Miss Wolters as his future bride. That was in March, according to the compaint, which says that Schultz took Miss Georgine down to the quilting factory for that purpose.
